constrained to address a word of warning to the residents of Hongkong generally. It now sixteen years since the great typhoon of 1874 swept over this colony, causing fright. ful mortality and enormous damage to shipping and property. Since that time only one typhoon, and that a small one, has visited Hongkong; these storms so frequent in the Pacific having passed us by with at most a switch of their tail. Prior to the year 1874, typhoons were by no means rare visitors to the Colony. On the 27th July, 1862, one of great severity, doing prodigious damage, passed over Hongkong, Macao, and Canton; and on the 8th September, 1887, another of almost equal violence occurred. In 1870 a typhoon of great strength took place, and this was followed by an other in 1871, also of considerable force. Since 1874, however, the colony and neighbourhood have enjoyed a most fortunate immuni-..$12.00 ty from these des ructive gales, and it is to be feared that a feeling of not cractly contempt for but rather indifference to the danger has grown up in the community. This of course is largely due to the fact that the majority of the present residents have never witnessed a cyclone or typhoon, and can form no conception of the wild fury and her-

ulean atrength of these gales. All the terrible scars and unsightly disfigurements caused by them have long since been repairoral accounts of the destruction wrought by them are too apt to be regarded as exaggerations or the record of phenomenal disaster unlikely to be repeated. CAPTURE OF PIRATES NEAR AMOY. FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT. AMOY, 2nd September. About a month ago three native traders left Chiang-chiu, a town situated some twenty-five miles from Amoy in a small junk, for the purpose of buying some pigs at a place called Hingiwa, which is a journey of two or three days. Everything went well and wind and weather proved favourable until passing the island of Me where Here ear's one evenin - they were attacked and boarded by armed pirates, who took possession of the hunk killing one man and driving two overboard. The two enevivors, who wned the craft, pended hard for their lives, which strange to say, were spared by the pirates, who, intending that they should be accorded the privilege of dying by starvation, left them on a very small out of the way island-thinking, no doubt, that in a couple of days, they would succomb to the privations. This was not their fate, however, for on the second or third day of their confinement a stray fishing bost, returning to Amoy, happened to see these unfortunate men and brought them back here. On their arrival they want to the Paotai, who immediately despatched the Chinese gunbost Hu-po in search of the desperadoes, and the two survivors went out in her to aid the captain in finding the scene of the outrage and detecting their own junk or the piratical oue. Every effort was made and all vigilance exercised in the search, but for some time no clue was obtained nor any suspicious looking vessel sighted; and it was not until the Hu no was about returning that the two Chiangchin men drew the captain's attention to a junk which they recognized as their own, being yah loed across a creek by two men. An armed party was at once despatoned in the ship's long-bost and, on nearing the craft, a number of armed men suddenly sprang up from bahind the bul-warks and lined the vessel's side, offering every registance and challenging the boat's o'ew who. after a short and decisive conflict, effected a boarding, and, with little bloodshed, managed to overpower and socure sixteen desperate looking characters. Three of those captured state, that hav were merely passengers in the junk and had no idea that they were among pirates : these man, who appear very suspicious, having many ugly scars about their bodies, are still confined the Yamen pending further intestigations, The chief of the gang has, probably through rrangement with the ruppers. evaded his sentence of ling-chi, by straugling him-self in his prison cell; and one of the worst-looking villains has sayed his bead by turning informer : the latter states that they were only stragglers from a large band of pirates that are about in these waters. The remaining sleven, who were notorious - coundrels, underwent severetoriure and for some time dog redly refused to own their guilt, especially four of them, from whom confession was only extracted last Sunday afternoon; and then, after frightful usage, and n a fainting condition, they were taken from the knee-rack and dragged forward to the dipped each culprit's finger in the inkand held it out to sign, or blotch, the death sentence which lay upon a red cushion. Constance felt in a day or two quite at home ut Miss Peyton's; her absolute duties were very slight. She went out with her shopping or in her brougham, for Miss Peyton jobbed a carriage while in town, saying that horse and a coachman were much too troublesome for a single woman. Constance offered to read to her the first morning after breakfast, Miss Peyton decidedly declined the offer. "I can see peri otly woll, my dear, and when
